The International Center for Responsible Gaming (ICRG) Appoints Ashlee Olujic as Director of Tribal and Community Engagement

LAS VEGAS – March 17, 2026 – The International Center for Responsible Gaming (ICRG) announces the appointment of Ashlee Olujic as Director of Tribal and Community Engagement, a strategic addition in the fulfillment of the organization’s mission.

A member of the Oneida Nation, Olujic understands both lived experience and specific expertise through her work in Tribal engagement. “Ashlee brings a powerful combination of professional skills, academic insight, and commitment to Tribal partnership,” said Michael Soll, President of ICRG. “Her leadership will help advance our mission to support high-quality research and education on gambling disorder while strengthening collaboration with Tribal Nations.”

In addition to her work in organizational leadership, Olujic is an award- winning children's author whose writing centers on literacy and cultural storytelling — underscoring her belief in the power of knowledge to strengthen individuals and families.

Her Master's work in Human Relations with a focus on Inclusive Leadership at the University of Oklahoma explores Indigenous research ethics, relational leadership, and community-centered engagement, reflecting her commitment to strengthening ethical partnerships between research institutions and Tribal communities.

“Tribal gaming is an economic lifeline for many communities,” said Olujic. “Independent research on gambling disorder and responsible gaming plays a critical role in advancing prevention, education, and treatment. I'm honored to help strengthen partnerships between Tribal Nations and ICRG to support meaningful dialogue and ensure research findings are accessible and relevant to Tribal communities.”
